Autumn's Gifts

We are now passing from a holiday where the muggle society revels in fear of disincarnate spirits, to the month where some of us dread having to gather with relatives to give thanks in celebration of the bounty of our harvest.

But as metaphysical practitioners, we strive to learn from those relatives and guides who have crossed over and those who are currently living in the physical realm. We learn to live in the knowledge that those in our families who push our buttons are there to teach us something; to show our triggers in projections of ourselves in other people.

So, I suggest that we not only live in gratitude to the Creator for giving us the bounty of food and family, but also giving us this chance to learn our own true divinity on the stage of physical existence. That those we meet on our paths are there to help teach and test us. Those who give us both positive and seemingly negative input. And also, to give thanks to the gift of animals and plants who have been provided for our nourishment. Embrace Mother Gaia's bounty with joy, love, and gratefulness.
